Desired Faculty Profile of Tokyo Medical University

School of Medicine (M.D. Program)

- Demonstrates a strong commitment to realizing the educational policies of the School of Medicine based on the University's founding spirit, guiding principles, and mission.
- Possesses the personal qualities and social awareness expected of those involved in the education of future healthcare professionals and engages continuously in self-improvement.
- Has sufficient knowledge and expertise in the relevant field and the ability to effectively educate students in that discipline.
- Demonstrates the willingness and ability to collaborate across disciplinary boundaries to enhance medical education.
- Respects diversity among faculty and staff, understands one's role and responsibilities within the University, and actively participates in university administration and social engagement activities.

Graduate School of Medical Sciences

- Demonstrates a strong commitment to realizing the educational policies of the Graduate School of Medical Sciences based on the University's founding spirit, guiding principles, and mission.
- Possesses the excellent character, judgment, and high ethical standards appropriate for educating and training graduate students, together with the ability to provide research supervision based on logical and critical thinking.
- Has sufficient research competence in the relevant specialty, remains current with developments in the field, and contributes to the sustainable advancement of medical research, dissemination of research achievements, and their application to society.
- Possesses an international perspective and is capable of promoting and teaching innovative and creative research that contributes to the advancement of medicine and the welfare of humankind.